

Public Comment for February 2023 PDC Meeting
Conner Edwards

1. Reporting Schedule Compromise

Thank you for being willing to compromise with treasurers on the reporting schedule in HB 1677 and SB 5284. Please consider moving up the effective date for the new reporting schedule from 2024 to 2023. Since there is now agreement on the reporting schedule, it doesn't make sense to delay implementation. It would be better for everyone to learn about the new reporting schedule and get familiar with it in 2023 (when the less important races are on the ballot) as opposed to 2024.

2. ORCA Meetings

In March, the ORCA system will finally transition to being completely browser-based. This is an incredible accomplishment for the agency, and those of us who participated in the meetings with the tech team are very thankful that the agency decided to invest resources in this project and implemented so many of our suggestions for program improvement. I hope that these ORCA meetings between treasurers and the tech team will continue to happen from time to time.

3. Keep an open mind about pending foreign certification changes.

Currently, there is a proposal pending in the Legislature (SB 5284) that would repeal the requirement that campaigns obtain and retain foreign contribution certifications. This bill would instead require corporations to file directly with the PDC. While the bill is controversial in other respects, this change makes a lot of sense: campaigns should not be deputized to serve as middlemen between corporations and the PDC. Many small campaigns and volunteer treasurers are not even aware that this requirement exists and so they are not collecting the form. I ask that the agency keep an open mind about this idea and not oppose it with a knee-jerk reaction.

4. Abolish the employer city/state requirement in WAC 390-16-034.

For some reason, the APA rulemaking petition that I submitted several weeks ago has not been posted on the agenda for Thursday, so I assume that it will not be heard until March. For that reason, I am asking you to please instruct agency staff to file a CR 101 notice in the Washington State Register on the subject of abolishing the employer city/state requirement in WAC 390-16-034.

As you know, there is a June 30 effective date cut off for rule changes to take effect in the 2023 election cycle. My understanding (from the Washington State Register flowchart) is that, unless the Commission starts moving forward with this process at the February meeting, it will be virtually impossible to repeal this requirement for the 2023 election cycle.

My understanding is that filing a CR 101 would not obligate the agency to repeal the requirement: once the hearing is held, the agency still has the ability to drop the proposal.

However, taking action now will preserve the Commission's ability to take timely action on this subject at an upcoming meeting.

Attached to this public comment, is a list of contributors from 2022 that were required to disclose their employer, occupation, and employer city/state that I pulled from the PDC's Open Data Portal. I have filtered out people who reported themselves as retired or as homemakers, etc.

Before voting the APA Petition up or down, I would encourage you to look at a few of these pages, and cover-up the employer city/state column on the far right to see how little of a difference it makes from the perspective of a voter. At the March meeting, I hope that the Commissioners would be willing to discuss specific meaningful examples on the list of how repealing the city/state requirement would somehow negatively impact voters. Most states (and the federal government) do not have this unusual requirement, and all indications are that it doesn't make any difference whatsoever.

I have also included an article from opensecrets.org (a nonpartisan nonprofit organization that focuses on campaign-finance issues) relating to a parallel requirement on the federal level. On the federal level, there is no requirement that treasurers provide the city and state of employers, only the occupation and employer of the contributor. I include the article only to show that some contributors do not take this requirement seriously, and therefore don't always provide accurate information.

Along those same lines, I wanted to note that I recently reached out to staff on the issue of whether or not we are obligated to refund contributions where donors refused to provide employer and occupation information in response to our inquiries. The answer is that we are not required to refund these contributions, but instead may report "REQUESTED". A quick search of the PDC's database yielded over 4000 contributions where the donor's occupation was reported as "REQUESTED".

From Slaves to Pornographers, Campaign Contribution Records Rife With Characters

By Zachary Newkirk | March 31, 2011 11:37 am

Employer: "wife." Occupation: "slave."

That, at least, is how Robert Hannay of Paradise Valley, Ariz., describes his professional life in a campaign finance report filed with the Federal Election Commission.

Hannay's October 2010 contribution of $250 to Robert Steele, the Republican challenger to longtime Rep. John Dingell (D-Mich.), accurately listed other information, such as his name and address. But Hannay took some liberties when disclosing his employer and occupation.

"It's none of their damn business," Hannay told OpenSecrets Blog.

Freedom fighters, pornographers and self-proclaimed evil rich men are among the cast of characters appearing in federal campaign finance documents stretching back more than two decades, according to an analysis by the Center for Responsive Politics.

Federal Election Commission records show tens of thousands of contributions from sales representatives, consultants and mid-level managers, among other generic occupations. But the records also show a variety of "slaves," a handful of "Obama mamas" and even a "venture socialist."

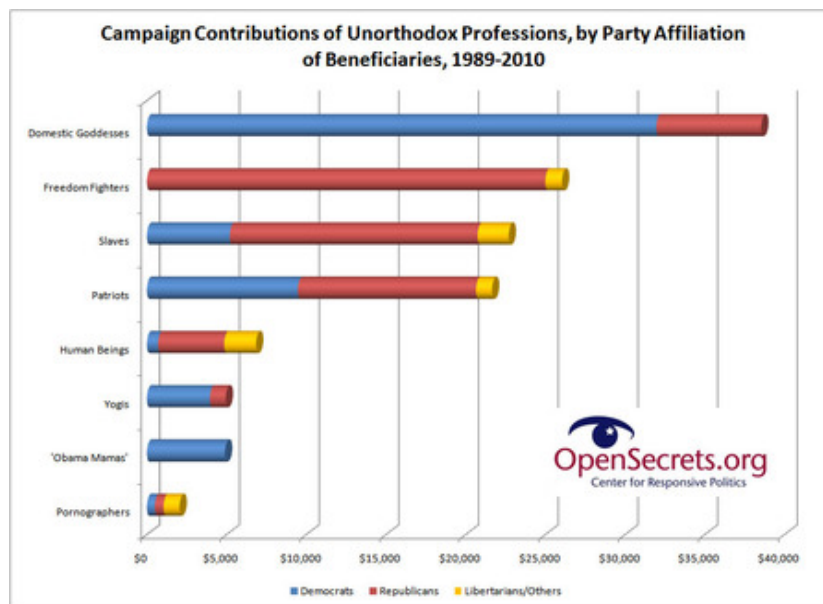

Together, these jokers and political statement-makers toss a quirky curveball at what's typically an exercise in mundane record-keeping, as they willfully portray themselves to the federal government as people they are not — or, at least, not completely.

Federal law requires that when a person makes a political contribution, he or she must provide a name, address, employer and occupation, along with the recipient of the donation and the amount. Most people answer these questions truthfully, without a sense of humor or a sense of defiance.

The unusual occupation that has been most prolific in political contributions? "Domestic goddess," accounting for more than $38,500 in donations since 1992. Of that sum, 83 percent benefited Democratic candidates or Democratic-aligned groups.

People supposedly employed by Jesus Christ or other deities appear with frequency, too. While some of these transactions are priests and pastors with a sense of humor, others could be construed as bearing false witness against their neighbor, and therefore, potentially illegal in the eyes of the law.

Here is a chart of the donations of some of these more unorthodox professions, with a breakdown of which candidates and political committees reaped the cash.

FUNNY ELECTION COMMISSION?

Some of the nontraditional occupations the Center for Responsive Politics discovered in FEC filings have an ounce of truth to them. Others less so. Some are simply absurd.

In September 2008, the Republican National Committee received $1,000 from William Kalal, who listed his employer as the U.S. Army. For his occupation, Kalal wrote "Retiring Terrorists." It's unlikely Kalal is working at a retirement community for members of al-Qaeda.

Daniel Cardona, who contributed a total of $550 to the 2008 presidential run of Rep. Ron Paul (R-Texas), twice listed his employer as "the streets" and his occupation as "drug trafficker/pornographer."

Kalal was not immediately available for comment for this story. Nor was Cardona able to be reached at either of his stated jobs, so OpenSecrets Blog is unable to determine how accurate his listing is.

Meanwhile, some political donors are no stranger to profanity, with many "f-bombs" in the official public record.

During the 2004 presidential election, Linn Foss listed both his employer and occupation as "f— you."

Foss, who says he's self-employed, told OpenSecrets Blog that he wrote what he did because he was likely irritated at having to provide the information in the first place. Foss made a $500 donation to the Democratic National Committee.

"I don't believe in expletive arguments as a rule," Foss explained. "I didn't mean to rub anyone the wrong way."

He said he believed his online contribution would simply vanish into the vast realm of cyberspace.

"I just figured somebody would be putting this info into a profile, and I didn't want to be in a profile," Foss said. "In those days, I think I was doing what I could to equalize the woebegone Democrats against the Republican machine."

Some political donors spice their true occupations with a little description.

Patrick Collins, a lobbyist at Collins Consulting who works mainly with environmental organizations, made an online donation of $1,000 in support of Missouri Democrat Judith Baker's failed run for the U.S. House in November 2008 .

When prompted for his occupation, Collins listed himself as an "evil lobbyist."

"It was more of a response to rhetoric going around the Hill and in Washington that lobbyists are evil," Collins explained to OpenSecrets Blog. "Just a little gesture of solidarity to the lobbyists."

For the record: Collins does not actually consider himself to be evil.

"I am a pragmatic do-gooder," he said.

Similarly, in October 2004, Teresa Roper contributed $250 to the DNC. Her job, according to the official paperwork? "Greedy trial attorney." She did not return calls for comment.

Other contributors list their occupations as self-descriptions.

William Waibel contributed $500 to the RNC in November 2008, and listed his occupation as an "Evil Rich Guy." He was unavailable for comment.

Self-employed Franklyn Bair's occupation — in a form he filled out for a $250 to then-Rep. Alan Grayson (D-Fla.) in September 2010 — was simply "Bull Shiter [sic]."

The most general occupation the Center found was "human," listed by one Steven Blondeau in an October 2008 contribution of $250 to Barack Obama. Blondeau also made three donations of $250 a piece to Obama listing his occupation as "yogi," a term for someone who practices yoga.

And Blondeau wasn't the only self-described "human." Half a dozen other contributors listed themselves as "human being."

One of them, Shane Vincent of Bartlett, Illinois, listed his employer as God and his occupation as "human being." Another of them, Silvio Levy of Berkeley, Calif., similarly listed his occupation as "human being," but Levy listed his employer as "self."

According to the Center's research, donations from these seven self-identified "humans" and "human beings" totaled $6,850. Of this, 61 percent benefited the GOP, 29 percent went to 2004 Libertarian Party presidential candidate Michael Badnarik and 10 percent went to Democrats, including Obama and Rep. Dennis Kucinich (D-Ohio).

Opposite these human beings, with perhaps the most physiologically descriptive occupation, is a $500 contribution to Obama's 2008 presidential run from Adam Fein. Fein listed himself as a "balding Jew writer" and could not be reached for comment.

None of this surprises Larry Noble, an election law lawyer at Skadden, Arps and former executive director at the Center for Responsive Politics Politics.

"The FEC has never stated what is an acceptable occupation and employer," Noble said. "There are a lot of issues of standardized reporting."

POLITICAL STATEMENTS: 'WE ARE ALL TAX SLAVES'

Since donors fill out campaign finance disclosure forms for largely political purposes, it should not be too surprising that a few political statements have seeped into contribution forms.

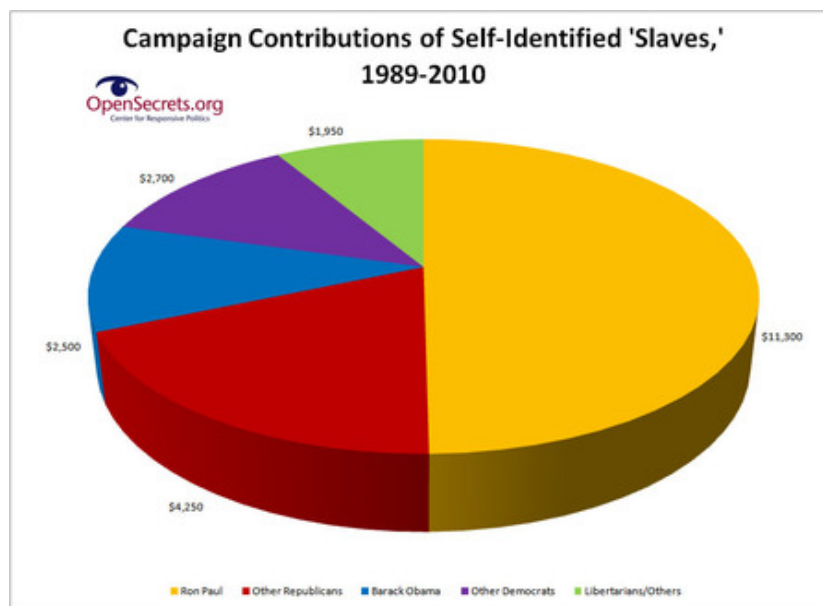

Robert Hannay, the Arizonian who had listed himself as his wife's slave, actually works in commercial real estate, not in involuntary servitude.

Notably, Hannay is far from the only "slave" listed.

The number of "slaves" who contribute to federal-level political may raise eyebrows:

There are "tax slaves," "government slaves," "debt slaves," "slaves to the government," a "taxed slave," "slaves to the IRS," "corporate slaves," "drones" and even a "love slave," according to the Center's analysis of campaign finance records filed with the FEC since 1989.

Thirty-four people declaring themselves to be "slaves" account for 66 contributions during the past two decades. This money has overwhelmingly favored Republicans, and Paul in particular (see chart below):

A total of $22,700 has been donated to politicians by self-identified "slaves." Of this, $15,550 went to Republicans and $11,300 (or about 50 percent) benefited Paul's 2008 presidential run.

"We are all tax slaves," Andrew Rule told OpenSecrets Blog. "We are slaves to the state. The state owns us. If we don't pay the tribute money we get punished."

Rule contributed a total of $600 to Ron Paul's 2008 presidential campaign. He listed his occupation as "tax slave."

Although it was a true political statement, he said humor did, in part, motivate him.

"It is funny and a lark," Rule explained. "It's tapping into the vibe and feeling that 'hey you're taking too much.'"

Another contributor to Paul, Brian Tennant, told OpenSecrets Blog that "the government don't need to know what I do."

In four separate contributions to Paul in 2007, totaling $1,750, Tennant listed his employer as "me, myself, and I" and his occupation as "slave tax payer."

In reality, he's a roofer.

Hannay, for his part, initially attributed his odd occupation to "humor." Yet upon further reflection, he explained that he must "have [had] a sort of resentment for what you have to put down for governments, banks."

Some contributors making political statements may make up sardonic employers and occupations. Others breathe a sense of defiance into the FEC form. This is the case for numerous "freedom fighters" and one "fascist fighter."

Thirteen individuals listed their occupations as “freedom fighters,” and they accounted for more than $25,700 across 63 contributions. Of this money, 96 percent benefited Republicans and 4 percent benefited Pat Buchanan, Badnarik and the Libertarian National Committee.

Democrats have not received a single dollar from self-proclaimed “freedom fighters,” according to the Center’s analysis.

Sam Wolanyk contributed nearly $1,800 to Paul’s 2008 presidential run and volunteered for the campaign in New Hampshire. Wolanyk was one of those who listed himself as a “freedom fighter.”

“I am self-employed, and I find that a lot of what I do is confiscated by stupid government regulations,” Wolanyk told OpenSecrets Blog. “Wolanyk” also roughly translates to “freedom fighter” in Ukrainian, according to the lifelong libertarian

Last November, Wolanyk was arrested at San Diego International Airport for refusing to yield to Transportation Security Administration pat downs or a full body scanner. Instead, he stripped down to his underwear to prove he was not carrying anything harmful.

“It’s about ‘you will submit,’ and I am not going to f—ing submit,” Wolanyk told OpenSecrets Blog. “The government wants the people to be sheep to justify their existence.”

He did not express much surprise that the FEC overlooked his contribution or did not notice his unusual occupation.

“They’re a government organization. Therefore they f— up everything they touch,” he said.

Wolanyk praised other people who contributed to Paul and listed themselves as freedom fighters. “Those are the only people that care about liberty,” he said.

One such person was Michael Roth, another self-proclaimed “freedom fighter,” who contributed more than $700 to Paul’s presidential campaign.

“We felt out freedom was being taken away,” Roth explained to OpenSecrets Blog. “We kind of came together as a group of people who felt lost.”

Other contributors are more explicitly political in their employer and occupation.

In September 2004, Kelly Jacobs of Hernando, Miss., contributed $1,000 to the Democratic Party of Mississippi. She listed her employer as “Fire Bush” and her occupation as “Fire Bush Mama.”

Dennis Worden of Pleasanton, Calif., contributed from the other side of the political spectrum.

He contributed $500 to Republican U.S. Senate candidate Sharron Angle of Nevada and $1,000 to the conservative Super PAC for America in 2010. Both times he listed his employer as “Unemployed Thanks to Obama” and his occupations, respectively, as “Still waiting for Obama’s stimulus” and “None thanks to the Democrats.”

Neither Jacobs or Worden could be reached for comment.

EMPLOYED BY THE DIVINE — OR HEAVENLY EMPLOYMENT

Some donors are apparently employed by holy beings — a few listed deities as their employer.

For example, Shirley Burt of Bettendorf, Iowa, reported “My Lord Jesus Christ” as her employer, while stating her occupation was “Kingdom homemaker” when making a contribution to the Campaign for Working Families in April 2010.

Those who declare God or Jesus Christ as their employer are generous in their political contributions.

These spiritual donors account for 56 contributions totaling more than $29,600, according to the Center’s research.

Republicans have received about two-thirds of this money, while third-party candidates — including anti-abortion rights activist Randall Terry’s congressional bid back in 1998 — have received 16 percent. The remaining 21 percent have gone to Democrats.

Some contributors equated themselves with being divine.

Rachel Baker of Tucson, Ariz., was one of the political contributors to list her occupation as "Domestic Goddess" in a June 2010 contribution to Rep. Gabrielle Giffords (D-Ariz.) for $2,400.

In a pair of contributions totaling $500 to the Paul campaign, Rolynda Brewer of Ramona, Calif. simply listed her occupation as "Goddess."

Political contributors can also be a proud of their secular endeavors, as OpenSecrets Blog has discovered.

Scott Hager trumpeted his culinary prowess on his federal election form by listing his occupation at Washington, D.C., restaurant 2Amys as "damn good cook" in a September 2008 contribution to Obama's presidential campaign.

William Hyers is perhaps one contributor who has made waves. In a $200 contribution to Sen. Kay Hagan (D-N.C.) made in September 2008, Hyers listed his employer as "Obama" and his occupation as "campaign God."

In a $500 contribution to MoveOn.org in June 2008, Alexandra Sarason of Seattle, Wa., listed her employer as "self-employed" and boasted her occupation as "Mama extraordinaire."

THE NITTY GRITTY LEGALESE BEHIND THE DONORS

The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 puts the burden of ensuring accuracy of campaign finance filings onto political committees' treasurers.

They must show that they have made "best efforts to obtain, maintain and report the information required by law," which includes the contributors occupation and employer, according to the FEC.

"The obligation is on the committee, not the contributor, to try to obtain this information," said Noble, the election law lawyer.

The key word is "try," as it equates to showing "best efforts."

Federal law defines occupation as "the principal job title or position of an individual and whether or not self-employed" and employer as "the organization or person by whom an individual is employed."

"It is lawful to leave [occupation and employer] blank," Noble said. "Those are the classic ones that they have to ask for, but they can accept the contribution if they don't get that information."

Inaccurate reports are possible but "everything is determined on a case by case basis," Mary Brandenberger, a Federal Election Commission spokeswoman, told OpenSecrets Blog.

Determining what is a reasonable occupation and employer is sometimes subjective.

Filing false information is illegal but violators are unlikely to get into big trouble.

"If someone put down their occupation as human being... I don't think people would go after that," Noble explained.

By providing false information on an FEC form, a contributor is providing false information to the government.

"A wholesale effort to hide information from the government would be illegal," Noble told OpenSecrets Blog. "You don't get involved unless it's a concerted effort to hide information."

In these extreme cases, offenses could be prosecuted as felonies and punishable by fines or even jail time.

A reports analyst at the FEC examines every contribution exceeding $200, and if a segment of the required information is missing or inaccurate, the political committee must file additional paperwork.

"There is a fair argument that if an occupation or employer is clearly nonsense, the committee would have to go back and ask again," Noble told OpenSecrets Blog.

Violating political committees may be subjected to administrative fines.

The Center's research turned up a surprising number of unusual occupations and employers but there are still hundreds of thousands of political donors who played by the rules.

"It's a matter of scope and resources," Noble said.

He suspected the Federal Election Commission is unlikely to look at the relative handful of unusual cases when dealing with such massive quantities of contributions.

"These days the FEC is not at all aggressive, so I don't see the FEC taking this issue on as it currently exists," he said. "Occupation and employer is important enough to be put into law so you should [provide] this information. Theoretically, Congress could take a look at this if this is a widespread problem."

Administrative Procedures Act Petition per RCW 34.05.330
Petition for Amendment of WAC 390-16-034

Proposed Modification - WAC 390-16-034 – “Public disclosure commission— Additional contribution reporting requirements.”

WAC 390-16-034

Additional contribution reporting requirements.

Pursuant to RCW 42.17A.240, each report required under RCW 42.17A.235 shall disclose, in addition to the name and address of each person who has made one or more contributions in the aggregate amount of more than two hundred and fifty dollars ~~one hundred dollars~~, their occupation, and the name and address of their employer.

Explanation

Commissioners:

I am requesting that the PDC eliminate the requirement that campaigns must disclose address information about a person’s employer on form C3. I am also requesting that the PDC update the $100 threshold to account for inflation, which the agency already appears to support. As was discussed at the meeting, currently the agency is only requesting that we provide the city and state where the person’s employer is located, and not the full address of the employer as indicated in the WAC (which we are literally unable to provide using the agency’s ORCA software).

While we are grateful that the agency is willing to amend the WAC to reflect the actual information that the agency is requesting of us, I am asking the agency to go one step further and eliminate the requirement that we provide any address information relating to people’s employers. From the discussion at the meeting, it sounded like there might be some interest in this idea. In support of this idea, I offer the following points:

- 1) The term “address of their employer” is ambiguous, and open to multiple divergent interpretations. As Commissioners Downing and Hayward brought up in response to my bringing up the Boeing example, there is no real clarity on what the true address of an employer is as contemplated by the WAC. Conceivably, it could be any number of locations. The address could be where the employer is incorporated, it could be the state headquarters, it could be the national headquarters, it could be the international headquarters, it could be the physical location where the employee actually shows up to work, conceivably it could even be a person’s home address if they are self-employed or work primarily from home. As someone who processes a lot of these contributions, I can tell you that different people interpret this requirement differently.

2) The disclosure of the city and state where a donor's employer is located is not useful information for voters.

As mentioned above, people interpret the term "address of their employer" in many different ways. One person might interpret the requirement to mean that they have to provide the address where they physically show up at, another person might interpret the requirement to mean they have to provide the address of the employer's national headquarters, etc. etc.

Because the requirement is understood differently by different people, the data that contributors provide (and the data that is in turn provided to the public through the PDC's website) is not uniform or accurate. Because the data is not uniform or accurate, I would argue that it is not particularly useful.

However, even if the PDC removed this ambiguity by clarifying what the term "address of their employer" really meant, how is information on where a person's employer is located useful to voters? I believe that it is not.

I would also point out that if a member of the public wanted to figure out where a person's employer is located, that they could simply Google it. This wasn't possible in 1970s, but it is possible today.

3) When viewing contribution information on the PDC's website using the Campaign Explorer (which is the typical way that most members of the public view contribution information), the city and state where a donor's employer is located is not even visible. The fact that this information is not visible to members of the public in the most common way that people access contribution information suggests that it would be no great loss if the requirement was repealed. (Yes, it is true that a person could find out the city and state where a donor's employer is located by viewing the C3 report image, or by going to the Open Data Portal, but relatively few people view information in this way.)

4) Obtaining this information often presents a significant difficulty for treasurers and campaigns.

As Commissioner Isserlis alluded to, employer and occupation information can be notoriously difficult for campaigns and treasurers to track down. This is because donors don't always communicate this information to the campaign they are contributing to, and this information does not appear on checks. Often times, donors see a request for employment information as being overly intrusive.

I want to describe a scenario that happens to me frequently every election cycle. One of the campaigns I work for receives a $500 check from a couple that they deposit. The couple does not disclose any of their employment information to the campaign. I notice the deposit while reviewing the bank ledger, and say to the campaign "I need the employer and occupation info for this couple". Someone from the campaign who knows the contributors' contact information

APA Rulemaking Petition to the Public Disclosure Commission

typically reaches out to them and tries to get their info. Often, the contributor or contributors will become argumentative and push back against this request as being an invasion of their privacy. Eventually, the contributors admit defeat and provide their occupation and the name of their employer. The campaign then communicates this information to me. But wait! We still don't know the city and state where the employer is located. So, I have to request this from the campaign yet again, the campaign has to call the contributors, and we go through the whole process again; this time for information that is of no particular value for anyone. (In case you are wondering, yes I make it clear to campaigns that we need the city and state where a person's employer is located. Very few people remember this without repeated prompting from me, probably because the requirement does not make that much sense to them.)

For the above reasons, I am requesting that the agency eliminate the requirement that campaigns must disclose any address information about a person's employer on form C3.

I believe that the agency has a responsibility, not just to continually create new requirements to enhance the public's knowledge of what goes on with respect to campaign financing but also to evaluate existing requirements to see if they still make sense. I think that this requirement is one that no longer benefits the public, and presents a significant burden on campaigns and treasurers. For that reason, it should be repealed.

If the Commission wanted to find a simple way to reduce the significant regulatory burdens on treasurers and campaigns without negatively impacting the public, this would be it. This is the low hanging fruit.

As you know, there is a June 30 statutory cut off for changing rules if they are to take effect before the 2023 campaign cycle starts in earnest. I would encourage the Commission to take action on this issue as soon as possible.

Best,
